Automotive magnesium components are typically produced by high pressure die casting (HPDC). When conducted with an optimised vacuum system, die and process parameters, HPDC can generate microstructures with fine α-Mg grains (5-20 μm), a sub-micrometre intermetallic lengthscale, and acceptable porosity.